A new attraction coming to a shoreline near you...

Our rivers and seas are in crisis.

A trip to the seaside is now more likely to serve up the stench of sewage rather than the nostalgic waft of paper-wrapped chips. And there's more chance of seeing dirty brown foam than otters and kingfishers on a riverside walk.

For too long, successive governments have allowed water companies to use our rivers and seas as sewers, with no major consequences.

That's why Friends of the Earth is campaigning for a new law to give everyone the right to a healthy environment. This new Environmental Rights Act would hold public bodies to account and give people legal means to challenge decisions that harm their health.

So, if you give a sh*t about protecting our environment, join us today.

Everyone should have the right to a healthy environment.

And our rivers and seas deserve to be treated with respect rather than used as dumping grounds.
